

Codemakers Debrief Cards

Use this activity to help youth think about what they are learning.

1. Form pairs or small groups.
2. Have each group pick 1 blue, 1 orange, and 1 pink card and respond to the prompts on each.
3. Provide groups with at least 10 minutes to work through their cards together.
4. Extend this activity with a group discussion or by allowing groups to exchange cards with others.

What I did...

How would you describe this activity to a friend?

What I did...

Breaking News! Create a headline for this activity.

What I did...

Write the recipe for this activity. What measurements would you use?

What I did...

It's backwards day. Write the steps for this activity backwards to forwards.

What I did...

Explain this activity to a parent.

What I did...

Draft a tweet for this activity (140 characters) or less.

What I did...

Explain this activity to the President of Awesomeness.

What I did...

Create a 3-frame comic to illustrate this activity.

What I did...

Create an acronym or acrostic poem for this activity.

What I did...

Use stick figures to create a 10 image flip book for this activity.

Why it matters...

List three things you learned from this activity.

Why it matters...

What did this activity remind you of?

Why it matters...

How did this activity make you feel?

Why it matters...

Why do you think you were asked to do this activity?

Why it matters...

What do you think the instructors wanted you to learn?

Why it matters...

What skills did you use in this activity? Were any of them new?

Why it matters...

Why would your parents think this activity was good for you to do?

Why it matters...

Do you think kids should learn this in school? Why or why not?

Why it matters...

Why does this activity matter to you?

Why it matters...

How does this activity relate to your daily life? List as many ways as you can.

What's next...

How did your thinking change after this activity?

What's next...

When is the very next time you think you would use this activity?

What's next...

How will this activity help you with your homework. Think of three ways.

What's next...

How might this activity help you get a job you enjoy when you grow up?

What's next...

Did this activity make you change your mind about something? What and how come?

What's next...

Help Wanted! Who might ask for help with what you learned today?

What's next...

Name all the people/careers that related to this activity.

What's next...

How or where could I find out more about this activity?

What's next...

Draw a map of how you could connect this activity to something else.

What's next...

Create a dream job description that relates to this activity.